BS in Communication Theory, Minor in Psychology, Metropolitan State University of Denver

Denver

Aug 2003 — Dec 2014

- My studies here provided me with a great background of all forms of communication, verbal and nonverbal, and how we can use that to express our thoughts, feelings, emotions in a clear and concise well thought out manner to reduce and avoid misinterpretation and/or future confusion or conflict. This includes actively listening while others are speaking as being a huge aspect of communicating well.
- It also taught me how our words, facial expressions and body movements all express something to the listener that are on the receiving end of the conversation.
- Taking these all into consideration and having a greater understanding of how a person is expressing themselves and what they are conveying to the listener, is very crucial to communicating with clear and fluid words that gives a person the best chance so that their communication is being received exactly how they are trying to express them.
